

VOLVOX Copyright terms

No commercial

You may not use this material for financial gain without the permission of the author(s). You may use it for your own personal use and for not-for-profit educational purposes, but you cannot sell or profit financially in any way from the use of the material. This work cannot be sold, either by itself or as part of a publication such as a book or a CD-ROM. It may not be placed on a Web site that charges for access, or used on a training course that is run for commercial purposes. If you wish to use the work for commercial purposes, you must contact the author(s) and ask for their permission.

Attribution

You must give the original author(s) full credit, even if you make a derivative work. If you use this work, you must say where it came from. You must include the author(s) name(s) and contact details in the document (postal address, eMail address, Web site URL etc.). Because Volvox is funded by the European Commission, the Commission must also be acknowledged.

Derivatives OK

You may translate, adapt, build upon or alter this work, but if you do so, it must be distributed on exactly the same terms as those in this license. If you wish to publish the derivative work e.g., on a Web site or CD-ROM, you must seek the permission of the original author(s). You may not, however, publish your version of the work without asking the author's permission; this is simply to allow us to keep track of any new works, and to allow us to keep you informed of any important changes that you may wish to incorporate into your version. It is difficult to define exactly what a 'derivative' work is, but your version is derivative if it is based substantially on the original version. This includes translations.

No derivatives

You may not change this work in any way. This may be because we have obtained permission to use the material from someone else who allows Volvox to distribute it, but only in its original form. Alternatively, it may contain copyright items such as photographs that we have purchased a license to use in the document, but our license does not allow us to grant others permission to use the items in their own works. Or it may be that the document includes important safety information that we do not wish to become separated from a practical protocol.

	No endorsement You may not use this work to endorse a product or service without the permission of the author(s). The Volvox materials are provided for teachers to use in the classroom, not for campaigning or to defame others. So please don't use it to promote political, charitable, commercial or other campaigning purposes. Try to treat others and their work with the respect that you would expect them to give you and your work.
	No kits You may not develop a practical kit or kits that you supply to a third party based on this protocol without the permission of the author(s). If you wish to develop a kit of parts for carrying out this practical protocol or classroom activity, you must first ask permission from the author(s). This applies even if you plan to distribute that kit to others free-of-charge. There may be reasons why the author is unable to give permission (e.g., if a practical protocol has been donated to Volvox, but that the donor has set limits on how that material may be used, because commercial or other interests are involved). Please note that this restriction is not intended to stop teachers preparing sets of equipment for their own use or for use by their colleagues in the same institution.
	Public domain This work is in the public domain and may be used freely. This material has been released into the public domain by the copyright holder, its copyright has expired, or it is ineligible for copyright. This applies worldwide.
	Share alike You may freely distribute this work, but you must do so under the same terms as this license. Additionally, if you put this work (or a derivative work) on a Web site or distribute it by other means, you must let the author know. If you plan to distribute the Volvox material more widely, or use it to produce a derivative work (perhaps a new version or translation), you must then license anything you create or produce under the same terms that applied to the original work. So, for example, because our original work was distributed free-of-charge, we would not want others to charge for access to it, or to charge for access to a new version of it. Additionally, you may wish to place this work, or a derivative work (perhaps in a different language), on a school Web site so that it is easy for your students to access. You may also wish to distribute the work on a CD-ROM for similar reasons. Volvox wishes to keep track of such new versions, and we therefore ask you to tell the author if you plan to distribute the work more widely.
	The Volvox project is funded by the Sixth Framework Programme of the European Commission